(By Associated Press.)
HUNTER'S QUAY, Firth of Clyde, July 10 .- With a very light air blowing across the bay and the prospects bad fice, but not finding him there went for yacht racing, the rival boats, Vig-over to the Court-House, where the llant and Britannia, started this morn ing in the race for the Clyde Corinthian Cup, valued at $300, in the regatta of the Clyde Corinthian Yacht Club.

There was the usual gathering of sightseers and yachtsmen, and the greatest interest was taken in the contest in view of the unsatisfactory nature of the aquatic duel of yesterday and the close race sailed by the sloop and cutter on Saturday last.

The course was the now familiar one of the Royal Clyde Yacht Club.

The race to-day being under Corinthia (amateur sailor) rules, W. Jamieson was at the stick of Britannia and Nat Herreshoff was at the wheal of Vigilant Capt. Carter, however, was watching ver Mr. Jamieson and Capt. Haff was keeping a close eye on Mr. Herreshoff. The lightest of airs swept over the waters just previous to the start, which was at 10.30 A. M., as usual.

Britannia did not get over the line until three minutes after gunfire, and Vigilant glided over three minutes behind the Prince of Wales's cutter.

It will gradually get warmer from this out, unleas, a peripatetic rainstorm, which slipped through Mr. Dunn's fingers last night, should unexpectedly appear along the upper Atlantic coast.

To-day is, with the exception of the same date in 1890, the coolest July 10 New York has experienced since 1871, from which year the Weather Bureau records date. The lowest temperature to-day was 58; in 1880 it was 56. The humidity at $0'clock was 57 degrees.

As the yachts went down the channel the American was really gaining nothing on Britannia. On the contrary, the latter was widening the gap, and when they put about the Prince of Wales's cutter had gained the greatest (Continued on Fifth Page.)
